Bank credit card fees: I pay off my balances in full every month and find the use of bank credit cards a convenient alternative to carrying cash or writing checks. However, the fees and interest rates banks charge those who carry a balance or make an occasional late payment are unfair. Banks are preying on the weak and seem to have no conscience about taking advantage of those who are the least capable of defending themselves. Are banks behaving any differently than drug pushers? What happened to our usury laws? If banks can't control their greed and behave honorably, then the government needs to get involved to reign them in and slap them down to size. The current economic crisis we are now in is due to uncontrolled greed within the financial community coupled with the government's reluctance to stand up for what is right and just. The lobbyists and special interests are running this country into the ground.
