

From: Anthony Leong
Subject: Electronic Fund Transfers

Comments:

Hello

We need new laws to protect the consumers against all the banks. The banks these days for many years do their best to scam the consumers, in any way possible. When I was growing up in the 80's, a credit limit mean something, and if you don't have enough credit, then your credit card would be declined. It's the same with the debit cards, if you don't have enough money available, the banks should decline your transaction, but none of the banks would do it, because they want to hit the consumers with a big fee which is usually $35 or $39. This is an outrage and how can the government continue to let this happen to the consumers? What ever happen to protecting the consumers against the banks and big corps, who always do their best to find some way to screw the consumers. We all know they have meetings to make up new rules to scam the consumers everyday. We need to regulate the banking industry, enough is enough. Please help us.

Stop letting the banks run wild in the WILD WILD WEST.

--

Yours truly,
Anthony Leong