banks seem to continually come up with ways to steal some more money from anyone they can! one thing in particular comes to mind. banks have repeatedly tried to charge a "dormant account" fee . what they won't dream of next. i put some money in a money market as a nest egg, and 6 months or less they want to charge some fee. surely they are using this money to enrich themselves. what's dormant? i understand banks have spent billions to get rules written to enrich them. could some one reinstate some sort of moral code? thank you p.s depositors should have the option, knowingly, of opting in or out of overdraft protection thank you. gary burkholder
