I absolutely agree with the rule to limit overdraft fees on debit cards and ATM withdrawals. However, I would also like to see it applied to credit cards bills which are automatically paid from bank accounts. I have a friend who had to pay a $35 charge because her checking account did not have sufficient funds, although she had a savings account in the same bank from which it was eventually paid. When she signed up for overdraft protection, she was not informed that she would be charged a fee. She assumed it meant if one account did not have the funds it would be paid from the other account.
