I don't believe you should be charged an overdraft charge on debit cards. Since it is a debit card I don't believe the transaction should go through otherwise what is the difference between that and a credit card. To me the reason for a debit card is to speed up the transaction process of the check, without having to get a credit card. The technology we have now, I believe you should get the option of whether or not the transaction goes through if the result will be an overdraft.
