

From: JuneOne2u@aol.com on 05/27/2007 01:20:02 PM

Subject: Truth in Lending

While you are thinking of changing the rules with regard to Credit Cards, I feel that something should be done with regard to payment dates. As I absolutely hate paying any credit card company interest, I never charge any more than I will be able to pay for when the bill arrives. However, when the bill does arrive, it gives one BARELY two (2) weeks to the due date. If I immediately sit down and write a check or, better yet, pay via the computer from my bank account, I am O.K.

However, if I am away from home when the mail arrives, it very often causes a problem for me to make sure the bill is paid and in their hands by the due date. As I said, I HATE paying them any interest. To me, a credit card is a convenience and saves me from carrying around a lot of cash but I do NOT BELIEVE in charging what I will not be able to pay for when the bill arrives.

Thank you for looking into this whole credit card business.

Respectfully,
June Peterson
Boynton Beach, FL 33436