Comments:

Being in the middle of a chapter 7 bankruptcy at the age of 59 currently, I can't enough to support this reform. It is obscene what the credit card co.'s get away with. People are being hurt terribly by companies that constantly push their cards in our faces with all kinds of promises, that in reality, aren't as they appear. I am a well-educated (Masters of Divinity) single woman who got behind when I suffered a divorce 4 years ago. No matter how i tried, I couldn't keep up because the interest rates kept going up, even when I stopped using the cards. I have always had a credit rating of 760 or thereabouts, but now my credit is ruined for the next 10 years I am told. My nice car is being taken from me even though I drive for a living. I have been shamed and humiliated beyond reason, by people who don't even know me or my story. I am very responsible, but that isn't enough in the face of the credit card industry. The information that comes with a new card is printed so small, a lot of folks can't even read it. Then, the explanations for all the different fees are hard for even my attorney to understand. That should not be the case. Please, please take this seriously and call the credit cards companies to task, clean up the language and let them know that they cannot just do whatever they please to good hard working, innocent people. Thank you.
