Federal Reserve: I have had all of the usual practices of credit card companies used on me, as most people with credit cards have in this country. It is unconscionable that the member banks are so very greedy and violent - encouraging people to use a credit card and then abusing them time and again is a very violent-based act - that they would use the methods they do to get the last drop of blood from even the ones who already have the least. I'm certain if you are thinking of doing something that would change the heinous practices of the credit card corporations, it is not because a wave of compassion has swept over your members, but because you are trying to implement the idea in the heads of working and middle class people that you are really changing. In reality, there is just not enough money in the world (pun intended) to make you do that for that reason, but because you have devised another scam that starts, as always, with the ignorant and obedient public believing you and trusting you. For my part, NEVER AGAIN! However, the changes would be a mild relief from the constant criminal procedures we have now.
