Comments:

Some gas stations will charge your card $75 the second you put your debit card in the slot, and have not even purchased any gas. Your bank account is reduced by the $75, and when you don't have those funds, you are charged an overdraft fee. Then, once you pump your gas, your debit card is credited the $75 and charged the amount of your gas purchase. There is no documentation of the $75 transaction on your online or paper bank statement. But you are charged the overdraft fee. So basically we're getting zinged when we actually had enough in our bank account to make the gas purchase, for the amount pumped.
