Comments:

I don't see how the banks can get away with charging me and overdraft charge for a debit transactions that they have not actually paid. I have already had this happen to me twice and still have no idea how they came up with the figures. I had 200.00 dollars in my account and my account never was in the negative. They (bank of america) said they could see it on their system but I could not see it on line nor on my bank statement. I told them until I could see what they see they should not be able to charge me a fee for something that hasn't actually happened yet. Are they going to start paying me interest on money that is not actually in my account but I tell them I will have it in the bank friday???No, don't think so.
