Comments:

I think that it is not the governments position to completely corner the market in the real estate industry. It is the consumers right to choose who they want to do a mortgage loan for them, not the governments! Since the government already has a vested interest in most of our banks, they could potentially raise the interest rates to where no one could afford to purchase or refinance a home. At least with mortgage brokers it make the industry more competitive and the consumer has a chance to choose between retail and wholesale. If brokers are cut out of the loop then that will only cause the economy to get worse. We are brokers work our butts off to provide for our famlies and if we are cut then that will just make thousands more with out a job and potentially homeless... Please consider all the adults and children that would suffer from you taking our lively hood away not to mention that it would only lenghten the process of a homeowner to close on a real estate transation.

Thanks for your consideration, Kelle Mortensen
