This will all the more cost the consumer in terms of quality of service and professional assistance. Once the income of mortgage brokers are clipped to a clerical level or their income cut dramatically in performing their duties, more than likely a great majority of us will be leaving the industry thereby leaving it to the banks that train employees who will take years to develop to become a true professional in this industry. It is analogous to making a pilot with little or no experience command a commercial airline with full passenger capacity. It just won't work. Secondly, the accountability and sense of responsibility will be diminished and a deterioration of the industry as a whole will most certainly ensue. Talk about unemployment! This will certainly add on to it. The free market and enterprise system as we know it is slowly, but, surely being dismantled in front of our very eyes. And the few men and women in congress that supposedly represent the hard working people that make it happen and do great service to and for their families, friends, communities and state, are collapsing and giving into this new socialistic style of government that is over correcting the capitalistic system. STOP this madness before all is lost!!!!
