I protest any action by the Federal Reserve to make it easier for large lenders to further screw over the rights of borrowers. Haven't we bailed these jerks out enough already? Taking away this right of rescission is tantamount to another bailout of the likes of Wall Street. Why should these large financial institutions deserve any further protection than they already have under current Federal statutes? For once, it would be nice if the Federal government protected its citizens from the likes of these criminals. This type of proposed rule makes me wonder how many of the FED's employess are taking kickbacks from these financial institutions in order to get these unfair and unneeded regulations finalized. I stand admantantly opposed to this proposed rule and insist that it be withdrawn!
