In the current economic recession we are in and certainly in a depressed and getting worse housing market it would seem that the last thing America would want to do is make it harder to buy a home. Barney Frank has gone from every American needs a home whether they can afford it or not to making it next to impossible for clients to reach the closing table. And by the time they do most feel violated and are very angry about what we have put them through. But the US is on the edge of a cliff anyway so this just might be the push that sends them over the cliff. I strongly disagree with this administration, with The Dodd-Frank regulations that have already impacted our industry and think this would totally shut down the economy. I guess as nearly 58 years old I just need to move to another country if I can find one that America has not affected. I am very angry that anyone would even consider these measures.
