Private banking is not the issue, federal banking is. We can not print our way to prosperity. The issues with the economy stem from overspending by the U.S. government and destructive policy from the Federal Reserve. One example is the federal funds rate being held at record lows while inflation is being to spiral out of control. You can continue to point to low inflation numbers or the CPI but these figures do not include food and energy prices. Food and energy is everything we need to survive not cars and electronics. Commodities do not cause inflation, inflation causes commodities to rise. You can continue lying to the public but we are becoming ever more away of what is really going on. Your days are numbered and this seems like a ploy to regain public support. Not going to happen. The Fed needs to worry about it's own balance sheet, not the private sectors. So my vote is no.
