I'm writing not with a personal story, although I have some. I'm writing to ask for some common sense in oversight of financial practices. Although most people are decent and considerate, there are scoundrels among us. There are scoundrels among lawyers, among salespeople, among doctors, among lineworkers, among Presidents, and on and on. And it makes sense that, over any group which has power to help/harm others, there is a policing agency with real power to hurt those who overstep the rules.

Thank you for considering my comment,
