I'm writing because I am deeply concerned that the banker pay practices in effect today are the same that led to the financial meltdown that has so badly affected millions of people in America, in particular the middle class on down. I count on you to see that reforms are initiated that will curb the excesses of the past. I'm sure you, as knowledgeable financial people, will be able to figure out what these reforms should be.

It seems wrong to me that the banks should be making money hand over fist today at the expense of the taxpayers who bailed them out right after the meltdown. We've lost thousands and thousands of jobs, my young nephew and niece will have trouble finding a job when they graduate from college, and yet I still don't see in place any substantive reforms to curb the greedy excesses still going on. Thank you for your help in this crucial situation! Our country's moral center is at stake.

Sincerely,

Patricia C. Towers
