To whom it may concern:

Whereas a functioning and stable commercial banking system is tremendously important to US financial stability, banks should be prevented from making risky speculations with depositors money. For this to be prevented, we need implementation of a 'strong' version of the Volcker Rule--or as strong as current law allows, when considering the exceptions made explicit in Dodd-Frank. Please enact regulations implementing the Volcker Rule without further carve-outs and loopholes. Strong financial regulations kept the US financial system safe for 50 years, from 1933. Don't sell out our future financial stability to please influential financial institutions.

Thanks for your time and attention.
