Stability in a the financial system requires that consumer-facing banks be low risk, reliable businesses to the economy; they shouldn't be places where fortunes are made. Loaning money to small businesses is the key to economic growth and the 2008 shock disproportionately hit those organizations and the middle class because of a credit freeze. The Volcker Rule prevents these key institutions from becoming derivative trading casinos. I hope the measure is supported so that our country - and the world - can return to less turbulent times.
