Comments:

As a family physician my job is to provide my patients with safe treatments for problems they present with. If I stray from the accepted standards of care and hurt my patients with poor guidance I can get sued and loose my license.

What the financial institutions are doing is forgetting the average customer who has money in their system and focusing on profits. The end result is damage as most acutely seen in the recession of 2008.

Since the financial institutes have failed to show ethical behaviors, it is up to regulators to force them to stop actions that harm their clients and our country.

Again, in my world, if I behaved like the banks I would loose my license and likely loose the lawsuit that my customers would rightly file against the harm I INTENTIONALLY committed.
