Your comment: I support vigorous enforcement of liquidity for our country's banks. If these rules are stronger than international standards for banks, so much the better. The U.S. should be setting the highest standard not submitting to that established by other countries. We have seen what financial shenanigans can occur when the regulations of other countries are less than ours and our companies use those to do their business. No more should companies be able to leverage their dealings at the expense of our country's citizens. These requirements should be enacted and put in force as soon as possible given that our country is again on the cusp of another growth spurt when control and regulation are necessary to protect consumers from those who would take advantage of the situation for their own gain.
