I am appalled at this whole process. For years the largest Banks have been violating the laws of this country, including the anti-terrorism "Patriot act" which was supposed to be a serious matter. Investigations as far back as 2007 uncovered Economical & Financial Terrorism which still continues today. Not a single enforcement action has accomplished it's purpose. A fine is supposed to punish & deter future illegal activity, not allow it to continue. One possible reason could be the fact that fines aren't really much of a punishment when they're being paid with victim & shareholder money. It's akin to bank robbers having the option to pay lump sums for permanent bail with heist money.

The notion that criminals are too big to jail for fear of economical collapse is beyond the realm of stupidity when an option to simply replace them with honest people exists. For 6 years I have struggled to help my mother fight against a Bank who has been committing acts that include felony crimes. A bank who she, as well as many others of the public, trusted with her life. The fabrication of documents to steal homes (grand theft) is just one of many illegal activities still going on. Proof attached here. The Banks have not been in compliance, and have shown they have no respect for, or reason to fear regulators any longer. This brings to question, what exactly is the purpose of these entities who had a duty to act but sat idly by and watched for 6 years? And why are they, as members of the same Federal Reserve operation, collecting fines for violations that help no one but themselves?

Chase Bank, a sophisticated financial entity with superior knowledge and over 200 years in business is waltzing into US courts of law claiming the REMIC Trusts are foreclosing on homes, which directly violate their IRS tax positions. This is the crime of tax evasion that has resulted in trillions of dollars being stolen from the U.S. it's citizens. Where's the fear for the well being of the economy here? Why is everyone asleep at the wheel?

The IRS has come after me before for 8 cents, which they actually owed to me. I find it extremely disturbing that no one is seeing a problem. I can prove the Mortgage Trust in my mom's case is a sham, how many others are too? How long is this supposed to go on before something real will happen? Washington Mutual was shutdown for a lot less than what Chase has been found guilty of, and yet they still operate. Even after helping to fund terrorism and launder drug cartel money. And yet WaMu was shutdown, which I find highly suspicious since the HUD and FDIC information regarding WaMu do not match up.

Something is very wrong with the Banking Industry when good people are being victimized for years by the very businesses they trust with their life savings. It's clear to me that Banks have rendered regulation useless.

That defies all logic and common sense.

I. EVIDENCE OF FABRICATED PROMISSORY NOTE

This is evidence of a "cut & paste" signature on a Deed of Trust. This is what the Bank has been using as proof of their rights. They claim it was a copy of the original when in reality it's nothing more than a fabrication stamped with "true and correct copy of original" to merely appear authentic.

The fact that it looks completely normal to the naked eye is disturbing and using a magnified glass only hinted of a possible issue. It wasn't until it was scanned and zoomed that the fraud was clear.

That break runs evenly throughout the entire signature, which is physically impossible with a pen and courts do not entertain matters of impossibility.

The use of any fabricated or forged documents in a legal proceeding is fraud upon the court. But since a Deed of Trust is a security instrument, the act of manufacturing, altering or fabricating one is equivalent to counterfeiting money (a felony crime).

EXAMINE ALL OF YOUR DOCUMENTS

If you understand the "alleged loan" process, it's pretty much guaranteed your documents are fabricated. It's the borrowers signed promissory notes that fund loans.

There is no real "LENDER" only a pretender.

Promissory notes are converted into checks and cashed, then converted to stocks and sold (process of securitization). Eventually they end up in REMIC trusts (not always).

It creates more problems by adding 3rd party investors without knowledge or consent, and they make money off you for free while you pay 2x amount + interest. The Bank makes 10x the original amount and still demand payment (super fraud).

All of this is the real reason it's never disclosed to you. They want you as far away as possible knowing your entitled to proceeds. It's why the trust and investors are always kept secret.

The whole scheme forces them to destroy the original documents, thus, having the above results.

If you doubt any part of it then I challenge you to try obtaining the paper trail to your alleged lender.

By law you cannot contract with an unknown party, so be sure to remind the Bank of that when they refuse to reveal their identity.

For if they ever did,... it would certainly lead back to YOU!
