Your comment: Protection of banking institutions was everything that was wrong about the 2008 crash. Did we learn nothing from that? Are we doomed to keep repeating the same inane crimes and misdemeanours that have repressed the individual investor. Do we really want to tell our children that we protected the very people responsible for the diversity between the super rich and the super poor? What this should be is a proposal for accountability. It should outline how the fat cats running our banks and financial institutions will be punished for the crimes they've committed and a demonstration to the world that the US financial markets are in fact, a fair and beautiful system, which promotes transparency and a level playing field for all.
