I can't quite tell if you're arguing for or against banks controlling how we use our cards, but I am violently against that very concept.

This is how you end up in a situation where you can't shop at your local store, because your bank partnered with Amazon.

This is how you destroy your currency, because if the people can't use it freely, they'll find something else. It could destroy the USD on the global scale as well, because now banks can decide if a trade deal goes through, not the government.
