No financial institution should be allowed to discriminate against the purchase of legal goods and services. Banks, credit card companies, payment processors, and so forth exist to provide a service and nothing more. It has never been and should not be their role to pass judgement or implement restrictions on what customers do with their own money, beyond what is required by law. This kind of overreach flies in the face of the free market and the rights of American consumers, and it has disastrous cascading effects on individuals, business owners, and the economy as a whole. I agree that vague, poorly defined, and subjective factors like "reputation" should never be used to block legitimate financial transactions.
