Banks and similar institutions, government included, should have no say on the use of a citizen's personal funds. Be it for personal items, household goods, or things of pornographic or violent nature. Banks are, by purpose, designed to store and transmit personal funds, provide loans, and back and facilitate investments, with the interests charged during those situations their payment for it. They, and the governments as well, should not ever be allowed to decide what a person-as in any living sentient being capable of exchanging money for goods and services-should be allowed to spend their money on.
