Reputation risk? Seriously? What is this, the 1830s?

If a business or individual is providing a service which is legal, credible, and legitimate they should be allowed to bank however they wish. Processing payments is a basic human necessity in the modern era, and no one cares what bank processes their transaction. No one is looking at porn artists' income and judging the institution that processed the bill or held the account.

This subject is foolish, it's genuinely nonsense being used to cover a bunch of pearl clutching virtue signalers that want to pretend they're morally superior, or just want to cause more pain and chaos in a world that's already drowning. How may gun stores do these banks finance? How many abusive loan companies? How many employ abusive collection agencies for their own gain? How much war profiteering are their CEOs enabling?

And artists drawing people kissing is the main concern? Get real.

Allow people in business to do business. Isn't that the point of America?
