Considering the prevalence of electronic payment services in the modern age, and its replacement of physical currency in most settings, as well as its reach beyond what we could previously achieve with hard currency, it seems more important than ever to establish grounds for the companies on which this infrastructure is built to operate in the same capacity as cold hard cash once did. That is to say, the service should be bound to being legal tender just as our physical currency. Those providing the currency, which these corporations have come to be in all reality, must be blind and unbiased to any and all legal purchases. Without this establishment we risk losing the liberties we've enjoyed in our republic tied to our free trade among people.

It is for this reason I weigh in on this integral matter. We must not allow our government and our citizenry to be made obsolete and subservient to a corporatocracy, and to this end not only do I support the restrictions outlined, but seriously urge you to impose the strictest regulations to this matter, as above described.

Thank you for your time.
