The quick and easy answer: Payment Processors should have no say on what I, as a legal adult, can spend my money on. Their job is to process the money and that's it.

The longer answer: Letting the likes of Visa/MasterCard/PayPal have any say on what adults can buy is a slippery slope into blatant unfair business practices. They could unfairly target a business that they don't like and run that business to the ground by refusing service to them. This is an attack on our First Amendment rights.
