

ANONYMOUS

Proposal and Comment Information

Title: Regulatory Capital Rules: Regulatory Capital and Standardized Approach for Risk-weighted Assets, R-1888

Comment ID: FR-2026-0008-01-C82

Submitter Information

Name: Anonymous

Submitted Date: 05/08/2026

To the Members of Congress,

I write to you not only as an investor in "Strategy (formerly MicroStrategy), but as a citizen who believes deeply in the principles that made the United States the greatest engine of prosperity and innovation in human history: private property, voluntary exchange, free enterprise, and individual liberty.

The proposal to prohibit U.S. banks from holding Bitcoin is not merely bad financial policy. It is a rejection of the American spirit itself.

Bitcoin represents something profoundly aligned with the values upon which this nation was built. It is decentralized. It is voluntary. It is borderless. It is governed not by political decree, but by transparent mathematical rules equally applied to all participants.

America did not become prosperous by fearing innovation. We became prosperous because we protected the right of free individuals to create, build, invest, and compete.

To ban banks from holding Bitcoin would not stop Bitcoin. It would merely force capital, talent, and financial innovation overseas — to jurisdictions more confident in free markets and more respectful of economic liberty. It would weaken the competitiveness of the United States while empowering foreign financial centers.

adoption by millions of individuals seeking an alternative grounded in scarcity, transparency, and personal sovereignty.

As an investor, I support companies like Strategy because they embody rational conviction, long-term thinking, and faith in technological progress. Punishing institutions for holding a lawful, open-source digital asset sends exactly the wrong message to entrepreneurs, investors, and innovators around the world.

America should lead the Bitcoin era, not fear it.

The United States became exceptional because it rewarded courage, productivity, and independent thought. Policies rooted in fear of decentralized technologies betray that heritage.

I urge you to reject any proposal that would prohibit U.S. banks from holding Bitcoin and instead pursue policies that preserve financial freedom, encourage innovation, and maintain America's leadership in the emerging digital economy.

I appreciate your time and work.

Respectfully,

Guillem.

Investor in Strategy