Public reporting burden for this collection of information is estimated to average 0.25 hour, including the time to gather and maintain data in the required form and to review instructions and complete the information collection. A. SCOPE

As required by the Monetary Control Act of 1980, in calculating reserve requirements on transaction accounts, the low reserve tranche is reserved at a lower reserve ratio than amounts in excess of the tranche.¹ In addition, the Garn–St Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982 established a zero percent reserve requirement on the first $2 million of reservable liabilities for each depository institution.² While the Act permits depository institutions, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Board of Governors, to designate the reservable liabilities to which the zero percent reserve requirement exemption applies, to the extent that transaction accounts are so designated only those transaction accounts that would otherwise be subject to a 3 percent reserve requirement (i.e., transaction accounts within the low reserve tranche), may be exempted. Only a single low reserve tranche and a single reservable liabilities exemption is allowed, however, for all offices of a single depository institution. Therefore, for any institution that has offices located in more than one state or in more than one Federal Reserve District and that files separate Reports of Transaction Accounts, Other Deposits and Vault Cash (FR 2900), the low reserve tranche and the reservable liabilities exemption must be allocated among the reporting offices filing separate reports. This reporting form is provided for the purpose of those allocations.

B. WHO MUST REPORT

This report is required from any depository institution that has offices located in more than one state or in more than one Federal Reserve District that file more than one FR 2900 report; this report is used to establish or change the allocation of the low reserve tranche or reservable liabilities exemption among reporting offices. Each institution should designate one of its reporting offices to be responsible for submitting this allocation report.

C. HOW THE TRANCHE SHOULD BE ALLOCATED

Regulation D requires that, if possible, the low reserve tranche be allocated to a single office or group of offices filing an aggregated Report of Transaction Accounts, Other Deposits and Vault Cash (FR 2900), but only if the tranche can be fully utilized by such office or group of offices. If the low reserve tranche cannot be fully utilized by a single office or group of offices filing an aggregated report, the unused portion of the tranche may be assigned to other offices of the same institution until the amount of the tranche or net transaction accounts is exhausted. The low reserve tranche should be allocated so as to maximize its utilization by a depository institution. For example, if an institution with more than one reporting office has total net transaction balances in excess of the low reserve tranche, the amount allocated to a particular office or group of offices filing an aggregated report should not exceed the anticipated minimum amount of net transaction balances at that office or group of offices. If, on the other hand, an institution with more than one reporting office has total net transaction balances of less than the amount of the low reserve tranche, the tranche allocation among reporting offices should reflect the maximum amount of such balances anticipated for each reporting office.

The amount of the low reserve tranche allocated to a reporting office may not fluctuate on a weekly basis. Rather, the allocation of the tranche is fixed by the amounts reported on this form and may be changed only as described below.

D. HOW THE RESERVABLE LIABILITIES
EXEMPTION SHOULD BE ALLOCATED

The rules governing the allocation of the reservable liabilities exemption are equivalent to those governing the allocation of the low reserve tranche; therefore, the procedure outlined in the above section should be followed in allocating the reservable liabilities exemption. To ensure that the reservable liabilities exemption is first applied to

1. The amount of the low reserve tranche is adjusted annually based on the change in total transaction accounts at all depository institutions.

2. The amount of the reservable liabilities exemption is adjusted annually based on the change in total reservable liabilities at all depository institutions. No adjustment is made to the exemption amount if there is a decrease in total reservable liabilities at all depository institutions.

net transactions accounts, two further rules govern the allocation of such exemption. First, for each individual office, the exemption allocation may not exceed the tranche allocation. Second, the amount allocated to a particular office or group of offices should not exceed the anticipated amount of net transactions deposits at that office or group of offices.

E. UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES THE REPORT MUST BE FILED

The following rules are to apply to depository institutions that merge across state and/or Federal Reserve District boundaries and elect to continue to file separate reports of Transaction Accounts, Other Deposits and Vault Cash (FR 2900) rather than an aggregated FR 2900 report.

1. To establish the initial allocation of the low reserve tranche and reservable liabilities exemption. This report must be filed at the time an office of a reporting institution is first established outside a single state or a single Federal Reserve District. The report must be filed even if the new office will not be allocated any portion of the tranche or the exemption.

2. To change the allocation of the low reserve tranche or reservable liabilities exemption. Changes in the allocation of the low reserve tranche or reservable liabilities exemption are permitted in the following circumstances:

(a) A depository institution may change the allocation of the low reserve tranche or reservable liabilities exemption

among reporting offices in different states or different Federal Reserve Districts effective at the beginning of each calendar year.

(b) If, under the existing allocation, the low reserve tranche or the reservable liabilities exemption is not being fully utilized by a depository institution during each reserve computation period, or if the existing allocation of the low reserve tranche is having an adverse effect on operations of the depository institution, the allocation may be changed effective the first reserve computation period beginning in any calendar month.

F. WHERE TO FILE THE REPORT

In each of the situations described above, a copy of the report for allocation of the low reserve tranche and reservable liabilities exemption must be submitted to each Federal Reserve District in which an office or a group of offices that will be allocated a portion of the low reserve tranche is located or in which an office or group of offices that is currently allocated a portion of the low reserve tranche is located. A list of addresses for each Federal Reserve Bank to which a copy of the report is to be sent is provided in Attachment A to these instructions.

G. WHEN TO FILE THE REPORT

The report must be submitted at least one week prior to the beginning of the reserve computation period in which the low reserve tranche or reservable liabilities exemption allocation reported on this form is to be effective.
