General Description of Report: The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the Act) requires any person acting as a transfer agent to register as such and to amend registration information when it changes. State member banks (SMBs) and their subsidiaries, bank holding companies (BHCs), savings and loan holding companies (SLHCs), and certain nondeposit trust company subsidiaries of BHCs register with the Federal Reserve System by submitting Form TA–1. The information collected is available to the public upon request and includes the company name, all business addresses, and answers to three questions about the registrant’s proposed activities as a transfer agent. The Federal Reserve uses the information to act upon registration applications and to aid in performing its supervisory duties.

Current Actions: On June 10, 2016, the Board, FDIC, and OCC jointly published an initial notice in the Federal Register 1 requesting public comment for 60 days on the extension, with revision, of Form TA–1. The Board proposed to revise the Form TA–1 to require submission of the form to a designated Federal Reserve Board email address, as well as certain other instructional clarifications.2 The comment period for this notice expired on August 9, 2016. The Board did not receive any comments. The revisions will be implemented as proposed.

Legal Authorization and Confidentiality: The Form TA–1 is mandatory and its collection is authorized by sections 17A(c), 17(a)(3), and 23(a)(1) of the Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. 78q–1(c), 78q(a)(3), and 78w(a)(1)). Additionally, section 3(a)(34)(B)(ii) of the Act (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(34)(B)(ii)) provides that the Board is the appropriate regulatory agency for purposes of various filings by SMBs and their subsidiaries, BHCs, SLHCs, and certain nondepository trust company subsidiaries of BHCs that act as a clearing agency or transfer agent. The registrations are public filings and are not considered confidential.

Agency Information Collection Activities: Announcement of Board Approval Under Delegated Authority and Submission to OMB

AGENCY: Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

SUMMARY: Notice is hereby given of the final approval of a proposal to extend for three years, with revision, the debit card issuer survey (FR 3064a; OMB No. 7100–0344) and to extend for three years, without revision, the payment card network survey (FR 3064b; OMB No. 7100–0344) by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board) under OMB delegated authority, as per 5 CFR 1320.16 (OMB Regulations on Controlling Paperwork Burdens on the Public). Board-approved collections of information are incorporated into the official OMB inventory of currently approved collections of information. Copies of the Paperwork Reduction Act Submission, supporting statements and approved collection of information instrument(s) are placed into OMB’s public docket files. The Federal Reserve may not conduct or sponsor, and the respondent is not required to respond to, an information collection that has been extended, revised, or implemented on or after October 1, 1995, unless it displays a currently valid OMB control number.

Final approval under OMB delegated authority of the extension for three years, with revision, of the following report:

Report Title: Interchange Transaction Fees Surveys.
The Federal Reserve received one joint comment letter from eight banking industry associations, which concerned the debit card issuer survey (FR 3064a). The commenters in this letter commended the Federal Reserve for proposing a full 90-day period for respondents to complete the survey, but suggested that the 90-day period commence in mid-February rather than mid-January, because respondents generally cannot begin collecting the requested data until February. The commenters suggested several changes to the online reporting tool which they argued would facilitate completion of the survey. The commenters also suggested that the survey no longer ask respondents to provide information on interchange fees repaid as a result of chargebacks and, separately, interchange fees repaid as a result of returns, but instead ask respondents to provide a single number that is interchange fees repaid as a result of chargebacks or returns. In addition, the commenters argued that the survey’s definition of “costs of authorization, clearance, and settlement” fails to include all costs related to a debit card issuer’s authorization, clearance, and settlement activities, and they recommended expanding the definition to include additional cost items. Lastly, the commenters suggested that international fraud losses be included as part of reported fraud losses.

In addition to revisions that were already suggested and were supported by the commenters, the Federal Reserve revised the debit card issuer survey to incorporate certain additional suggestions from the commenters. In particular, the Federal Reserve is commencing the survey at the beginning of February, providing a total line for interchange fees repaid as a result of chargebacks or returns, and making certain technical changes to the reporting tool for the survey. The Federal Reserve is not expanding the survey to include international fraud losses or additional cost elements.

Abstract: The Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act) requires the Federal Reserve to disclose, at least every two years, such aggregate or summary information concerning the costs incurred and interchange transaction fees charged or received by issuers or payment card networks in connection with the authorization, clearance or settlement of electronic debit transactions, as the Federal Reserve considers appropriate and in the public interest. The data from these surveys are used in fulfilling that disclosure requirement. In addition, the Federal Reserve uses data from the survey to include international fraud losses be included as part of reported fraud losses.
Detailed Discussion of Public Comments and Recommended Responses

Debit Card Issuer Survey (FR 3064a)

Section-by-Section Analysis

Section II: All Debit Card Transactions, Section III: All Single-Message (PIN) Debit Card Transactions, Section IV: All Dual-Message (Signature) Debit Card Transactions, and Section V: General-Use Prepaid Card Transactions

Question 3: Cost of authorization, clearance, and settlement—The Federal Reserve proposed to delete questions 3e and 3f which break out the fixed and variable cost components for line items 3b.1 In-house costs and 3b.2 Third-party processing fees, respectively. The commenters strongly supported this proposal. They argued that the allocation of costs to fixed and variable components places an undue burden on respondents by forcing them to categorize costs in an artificial manner outside of respondents’ standard cost accounting practices. The Federal Reserve believes that the commenters’ support for this change validates the Federal Reserve’s proposal to remove these items.

The commenters further believe that the definition of “costs of authorization, clearance, and settlement” fails to include all costs related to a debit card issuer’s authorization, clearance, and settlement activities. The commenters provided a list of categories of costs that should be included and recommended that these categories be reported as individual cost items, if they are not already. Specifically, the commenters recommended expanding the definition to include the following items: costs associated with receiving, responding to, and resolving customer inquiries with respect to debit card transactions; debit card transaction compliance costs; debit card transaction non-sufficient funds handing costs; card production and delivery costs; and a portion of costs related to establishing and maintaining debit account relationships.

The Federal Reserve is keeping the set of data elements as proposed. Some of the proposed categories of costs (e.g., cardholder inquiry and non-sufficient funds handing costs) are already included in the survey, and all of the proposed categories are costs that the Federal Reserve determined would not be considered as part of the interchange fee standard in Regulation II. Including these additional cost categories and requiring issuers to report at a more detailed level would not significantly enhance the Federal Reserve’s understanding of the relevant costs for Regulation II and would represent a significant burden to respondents.

The commenters suggested that international fraud losses be included as part of reported fraud losses. The commenters argued that international fraud losses should be considered as part of the fraud losses associated with domestic transactions for U.S.-issued debit cards because the data compromise leading to the fraudulent debit card activity frequently occurs in the United States and generates fraudulent international transactions even if the cardholder never leaves the United States. The commenters likened this to the Federal Reserve allowing respondents to include costs from international transaction processing centers when reporting the costs associated with U.S.-issued debit cards. The commenters acknowledge that the Federal Reserve’s authority to regulate debit card activity is restricted to the United States, but argued that this does not preclude the Federal Reserve from considering costs that occurred outside of the United States, if those costs could not have been incurred but for the issuance of a U.S. debit card.

International fraud losses arise from international transactions, not domestic transactions, and are therefore outside the scope of Regulation II. As such, international fraud losses are analogous to ATM fraud losses, which are also not included. The commenters noted that costs incurred at international transaction processing centers are included, but that is because costs incurred at those processing centers are still associated with domestic transactions, whereas international fraud losses are not associated with domestic transactions. Thus, international fraud losses will not be reported.

Question 6: Interchange fee revenue—The commenters suggested that the survey no longer ask respondents to provide information on interchange fees repaid as a result of chargebacks and returns. The commenters argued that payment networks providing interchange fee information do not readily provide a breakdown of chargebacks and, separately, interchange fees repaid as a result of returns. The commenters argued that payment networks often do not provide invoices to issuers until mid-January or later. Also, commenters argued that the necessary personnel are unavailable to begin completing the survey until other end-of-year closing activities are complete.

The Federal Reserve is making the survey available at the beginning of February instead of mid-January, and due in early May rather than mid-April, in order to address the timing concerns raised by the commenters.

The commenters also proposed three changes to the online reporting tool for the survey. First, commenters recommended that the online survey round entries to the nearest whole dollar. Second, commenters recommended that entries be right-justified. Third, commenters suggested that there be a way for respondents to consolidate all of entries, across all sections, into a single editable spreadsheet. The Federal Reserve is making all of these changes, subject to any unanticipated technical difficulties that may arise in the current interface.
