Since the meeting on August 2, at which the Committee adopted a clear-cut policy of restraining inflationary developments, the reserve position of banks had changed markedly. During August, banks had been in the position of borrowing net amounts of reserves, whereas in July and most earlier months of the year the banking system had had a moderate to substantial volume of free reserves available for lending. Discount rates at all of the Federal Reserve Banks had been increased during the first half of August, one Bank having increased the rate from 1¾ per cent to 2¼ per cent, and the other Banks having increased their rates from 1¾ to 2 per cent. Other interest rates had also resumed an upward tendency after an interruption early in August. Bank credit had continued to rise, however, reflecting expansion in most types of loans in a period of usual seasonal slack. It appeared that the rate of growth in the money supply had increased.

The economic situation continued to be one of demand pressure in the industrial sector and supply pressure in the agricultural sector of the economy; there was apparent over-all price stability because price declines in the agricultural sector were offsetting price increases in the industrial sector. The wage-cost pressures toward higher prices appeared to be increasing, and the feeling of optimism on the part of business and the public did not appear to have lessened. Inventory accumulation seemed to be increasing. The Committee felt that a restrictive credit policy was called for in this situation and that one of the questions was how to conduct open market operations so as to make the increase that had taken place in discount rates at the Reserve Banks effective as a restraining force.

There was agreement that the Committee's policy should be one of gradually increasing pressure and that such a condition would result if the System continued its existing policy of not supplying reserves through open market operations except to relieve temporary stringencies in the money market. It was also thought that a further increase in discount rates at the Federal Reserve Banks might be needed as a part of a program of continuing restraint on credit expansion. The Committee's existing directive calling for operations for the System account that would restrain inflationary developments in the interest of sustainable economic growth seemed appropriate to the program agreed upon, and it was therefore renewed without change.

The Committee renewed without change the directive to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York that had been approved at its meetings on August 2 and 23, 1955, providing that, among other things, transactions for the System open market account be with a view "to restraining inflationary developments in the interest of sustainable economic growth."

Review of the available data suggested that the economy had entered a phase of decelerating advance. Manufacturing employment in durable goods lines had been maintained on an overtime basis for several months; output in several important industries was close to capacity; the labor market had reached a state of tightness in many localities; and restrictive monetary developments with higher interest rates had been operating with mounting pressure to brake credit expansion. Since the preceding meeting, discount rates at the 11 Federal Reserve Banks that had fixed such rates at 2 per cent in August had been brought up to the 2¼ per cent level, to which the rate had been increased by one Reserve Bank early in August. Demand was still pressing the markets for industrial products, however, despite the prevailing high level of supply. Price advances were occurring in considerable numbers, with further widespread increases in prospect. Business, consumer, and mortgage loans at banks had continued to expand, a particularly sharp advance having appeared in business loans. It was the judgment of the Committee that this situation called at least for the maintenance of, and preferably for some slight increase in, the restraining pressure it had been exerting through open market operations. To carry this out, it renewed the directive calling for restraint on inflationary developments through maintaining pressure on the reserve position of banks, but with the additional understanding that doubts should be resolved on the side of increased pressure.

1. Authority to Effect Transactions in System Account.

At this meeting, which was held through telephone conference arrangement, the Committee agreed that no change be made in the existing general program of restraint on credit expansion, excepting the elimination of the understanding reached at the meeting on September 14, 1955, that, in conducting operations for the System open market account in pursuit of the policy of restraint, doubts should be resolved on the side of greater restraint.
