

Renters, Homeowners & Investors: The Changing Profile of Communities

February 26, 2013 |

Renters, Homeowners & Investors: Theresa Singleton

THERESA SINGLETON: Well, today's event was a really fantastic opportunity for a lot of different stakeholders to come together and -- and share resources. What I -- what I really appreciated about today's event is that it was to -- in my opinion, a very effective way of bringing together researchers who are interested in this topics well as practitioners who are working in the field of investing in these properties as well as nonprofit organizations. And so when I am looking at the most effective strategies or the best way of identifying strategies. I tend to think those that bring together, that are -- that are research informed practice. And practice informed research are the best results. And so an event like this, which brings together very well-respected researchers in the field of housing -- affordable housing and -- and foreclosure. As well as practitioners is one that is going to yield the -- the best results. And so it -- today's also -- today's event is also very much focused on identifying tools and strategies. And so I think that's going to be extraordinarily helpful. Not only for those of us who are lucky enough to be in the room and hear this conversation. But for those who watch the video. And -- and are able to tap into this information later on. So it's been a fantastic event. I'm really looking forward to the next steps that come out of this conversation.