Summary: Board members and staff of the Federal Reserve Board (Board) met with the Federal Advisory Council (Council), a statutorily created advisory group that is composed of twelve representatives of the banking industry (one member from each Federal Reserve District).1 During this meeting, Council members encouraged the agencies to expeditiously finalize the Stress Capital Buffer proposal (Docket No. R-1603) in order to enable banks to realize the full benefits from the Board’s recent efforts to tailor its regulatory requirements for domestic and foreign banks. Council members asserted that these changes, collectively, would allow banks to more efficiently reinvest capital and provide more lending in their communities.
